Administrative History

One of the first electrical shops in the city of Chicago opened in 1868. Owned and operated by George H. Bliss and L. O. Tillotson, this shop eventually became the Western Edison Light Company in 1882, with the rights to sell Edison electrical lights. In 1887 the Western Edison Light Company became the Chicago Edison Company and in 1892 Samuel Insull was elected as president of the company. Another electrical company, the Cosmopolitan Electric Company, incorporated in 1895 and in 1898 an operating contract was signed between the Chicago Edison Company and the Cosmopolitan Electric Company. These two companies consolidated into the Commonwealth Edison Company in 1907.
