Biographical Sketch

Jack Mulqueen, is best known to Chicagoans as an accomplished figure in local television and entertainment. A native Chicagoan, born in 1933 on the city's South Side, Mulqueen had a passion for the world of entertainment since his childhood. In his youth, Jack was an avid moviegoer and had a passion for performance. After serving in the army in Colorado during the early 1950s, Mulqueen returned to Chicago and entered the world of children's entertainment. Inspired by other puppeteers, like Burr Tillstrom, Mulqueen began organizing puppet shows and workshops across the city. It is through these puppet shows that Jack met his creative partner and future wife, Elaine Mulqueen. The couple soon formed a puppet show of their own and began to perform full time around Chicago.

After experiencing success in the world of puppetry, the Mulqueens transitioned into the world of local Chicago television. The Mulqueens began their television careers on the popular children's show Bozo's Circus as reoccurring guests. In 1963, the couple were given their own show, simply entitled The Mulqueens, which ran for two years. Capitalizing on the youth culture and pop music of the 1960s, the Mulqueens soon launched the even more successful Kiddie A-Go-Go in 1966. Hosted by Elaine (Pazak) Mulqueen as the character Pandora, the show served as a dance show for pre-teen kids and featured popular musical acts of the era. Notable guests of Kiddie A-Go-Go include Leslie Gore, Dick Clark, and Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons. Though Kiddie A-Go-Go left the airwaves in 1969, Jack Mulqueen revived the show back in the late 1990s for a brief run. Aside from his own work, Jack Mulqueen produced the work of others, like The Ginny Tui Show.

After Kiddie A-Go-Go's cancelation, Jack Mulqueen shifted his career focus to the world of advertising and other business ventures. He created Mulqueen Productions in the early 1970s, which specialized in making industrial films, commercial for TV and radio, and other promotional ad work for various companies. Some of Mulqueen Productions clients included Disney, food companies, Ice Capades, movie studios, Creative Presentations Inc., amusement parks, and Ringling Bros. Circus.

Jack Mulqueen's lifelong love of cinema and collecting movie memorabilia would lead him to be involved in many film related business ventures as well. In the late 1970s, Jack Mulqueen created a touring movie museum, which featured educational lectures, games, and pieces from Jack Mulqueen's personal movie memorabilia collection. His passion for film memorabilia would eventually lead Jack Mulqueen to form The Hollywood Collectibles Show. Hosted twice a year, The Hollywood Collectibles Show was an essential destination for movie memorabilia and autograph collectors.

In his later years, Jack Mulqueen continued to work on a number of projects and stayed active in his community. Mulqueen donated much of his time to the Catholic Church and took part in various religious projects. In 2004, Jack Mulqueen wrote The Golden Age of Chicago Children's Television, with Ted Okuda, which called upon on his experience in Chicago television. After his work was published, Jack participated in several lectures and presentations about the history of Chicago children's television. In 2012, tragedy struck Jack Mulqueen when his beloved wife and partner Elaine Mulqueen passed away. In 2016, Jack Mulqueen passed away due to congestive heart failure at the age of 83, leaving behind an impressive body of work.
